ANNAPOLIS, Yanuary 18. TO THE CITY MEMBER.

SIR, PERMIT an humble auditor PERMIT an humble auditor to congratulate you on the fuccess of your efforts (sait night's debate) in favour of the established church; may you be always victorious in the promotion of virtue and piety, proving in this the glorious instrument of perpetuating our church supremacy, and render all attempts to subvert her fruitless.

A coincidence of sentiment is the great basis of respect and esteem. Permit me, fubert her fruitles.

A coincidence of fentiment is the great basis of respect and esteem. Permit me, whilst I avouch the greatest veneration for your great merit, to detach some thoughts which may tend to enlarge your consideration of this subject.

To be zeasous for the promotion and safety of that religion which we think most acceptable in the sight of Him who is our supreme good, can best express our vittue, as being the foundation of our future felicity, and the support of our present establishment. Sir, he who wishes to avoid divisions, and to enjoin uniformity, as her as may be among us, will find it previously necessary, some religion and some good discipline be promoted and countenanced by law. Because in striving for superiority, I inser some religion will of course prevail; perhaps some sect or tenet with baneful maxims, will overshow this once peaceful land, assume independent government, within another, must tend to the distruction of both. As there is therefore an obvious necessity for some established religion among us, let it be such an one as is best fitted to the wants of all men, and made at least so far universal, as to promote peace, harmony, and due subordination in the state. Here the old established church occurs to us, as most bished religion among us, let it be such an one as is best sitted to the wants of all men, and made at least so far universal, as to promote peace, harmony, and due subordination in the state. Here the old established church occurs to us, as most remarkable for her patriotism and public spirit; and if reduced to its primitive institution, the best calculated and disposiced to dispense the greatest degree of happiness to its members and dissenting brethren of any church on earth: because the is most likely to maintain order and discountenance strife for conscience sake, and because we have long experienced her efficacious influence, and have reason to think, if we now let her fall, we can neither continue or discontinue her, without miserable inconvenience. You have well represented, Sir, the rent already made, the diversity of opinions that flow in upon us; every seet having a new persuasion, forms a new party, without any restraint or principle lodged or less, save what rests in the human heart. Inundations still more baneful we have to fear. Already uncharitable to the extreme, jealous of one apother, behold the seeds of rancour and antipathy scattered abroad! each bolder forth forms his party; the desire of luere or applause are alone powerful stimulatives; novelty is not without admirers; the lax of discipline, the zeal and ambition of our adversaries, makes every good christian tremble at the approaching ruin. We are sensible of the persecuting disposition of many religious, that from the very nature of their principles, they will not display the same degree of lenity, moderation, and sorbearance, to us, as we have ever shewn to them. If we could be sure of an equal indulgence, we might with less regret put an end to all distinctions; but, alax! fearch the whole world for a precedency; if you found an established church wanting, you found an established church wanting, you found an established church wanting, you found an archy and confusion there. I would farther beg leave to observe, the very libertines

May we not hope, Sir, that the think-ing and fensible part of our differing brethren in this state, whose views are moderate, whose ambition is restrained by fame noble principle, would be highly fatisfied with a general toleration and other privileges the law affords (without encroaching on the church supremacy); more they camot desire or you grant with safety or decency; let them acquiesce from political motives at least, in that wholes me and necessary law which shall perpetuate an established church. Now let us view her discipline, when placed on a proper footing; the influence, if well adopted regulations will apparently prove the best instrument of establishing our rights and privileges, as well as our surface well being, on a permanent soundation; it will promote uniformity and unanimity among us, in alluring thousands of separatists into one fold under that great shepserd the prince of peace.

May we never want saithful and skilful persons to conduct us, and may Maryland ever conside in your good sense and distinguished abilities, is the prayer and enlarged hopes of
